assigned to his committee, contributions were made to recommendations of other committees. For example, input to the PSC concerning their actions on government-wide training objectives, use of the polygraph for counterintelligence purposes within the Department of Defense, and reimbursement to the government for personnel security investigations based on false information. Mr. Anderson concluded by informing the Chairman that ISCOM's course for its second year of operations has been influenced to some extent by past events. It is clear that the ISCOM will have to complete the current initiatives stemming from the President's and Senate reports. Specifically, the committee must address the many information security questions arising from the imminent placement into widespread use of the STU-III, as well as ways and means to stimulate and provide better classification management. It must also provide support and guidance for the implementation of the 13 initiatives assigned to the Information Security Oversight Office. Due to the nature of the projected items to be worked, the ISCOM is anticipating that it will be increasingly active and is expecting to meet at least six more times, with the possibility of forming working subcommittees to accomplish assigned, as well as selected, tasks in its second year of business.
